A Heap of Living, by Cora W. Helman, is a delightful byproduct from the celebration for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Church of the Brethren in Onekama held during 1958, although the Church's organization here was in 1909. Following the activities of the local Church and its well-known minister, J. Edson Ulery, who first came to preach in Onekama during 1906 and remained most of the years until his death in 1959, the book tells that the old Church was dedicated in 1910. It burned in 1946; and the present building, designed by Church Architect Charles Deardorff, was built on the location of the former Church and was dedicated in 1947. The large lancet window in the south elevation of the new edifice portrays Christ. Several additions have been made to the new Church, including an addition that has moved the entrance.
