

"Atzmon is a loose cannon: a larger than life figure with an almost overpowering musical personality... it's as perfect a jazz marriage as you could wish for"

---Phil Jonson, Independent on Sunday

An evening of conversation, humor and music with:

Gilad Atzmon

Internationally acclaimed jazz saxophonist and composer Gilad Atzmon comes together with pianist Rich Siegel to conduct a dialogue against war.

London-based Atzmon has recorded and performed with the likes of Sinead O'Connor, Robert Wyatt and Paul McCartney, and is a veteran member of the "The Blockheads."

Atzmon's "Exile" was voted BBC Jazz album of the year in 2003, and he regarded as one of the greatest saxophonists of his generation.

The Guardian described Atzmon as "one of London's finest saxophonists [but] it is Atzmon's blunt anti-Zionism rather than his music that has given him an international profile, particularly in the Arab world, where his essays are widely read."

His novels, "Guide to the Perplexed" and "My One and Only Love", as well as his political and cultural essays are published widely in many languages. His newest book, "The Wandering Who?" has just been released.
