support the creation of a Palestinian state on the basis of the 1967 borders. This, the EU has said, is "essential to a just and lasting peace.

According to the EU, the formation of a Palestinian state is a necessary step towards achieving peace in the region. The EU has been a strong advocate for the two-state solution, recognizing the importance of ensuring that Palestinians have the right to self-determination and to an independent state of their own.

However, the EU's stance has faced opposition from both the Israeli government and some members of the international community, who argue that a Palestinian state would undermine Israel's security and territorial integrity. The EU has continued to support its position, emphasizing the need for a just and lasting peace in the region that respects the rights of both Israelis and Palestinians.

In conclusion, the EU's decision to recognize a Palestinian state is a significant step towards achieving peace in the region. It is hoped that this move will encourage other nations to follow suit and that it will pave the way for a peaceful resolution to the conflict.
