February 23, 1995

(1) Joe lost, as would be easy to prove. (no relation probably between as and complement)
(1b) Joe is crazy, as Mary would be easy to convince,
There has been considerable discussion of a Parallelism Constraint on across-the-board (ATB) extraction from coordinate constituents. This constraint (see Gazdar, 1981; Falk, 1983; Woolford, 1987) is sensitive to subject status. It blocks ATB extraction of a (finite) main clause subject if the other ATBees are not such. A wrinkle is that combined ATB subject/non-subject extraction is allowed if the subject is embedded. Thus:

(1)a. the woman who Bob called and Frank visited

b. the woman who called Bob and visited Frank

c. *the woman who Bob called and visited Frank

d. *the woman who visited Frank and Bob called

e. the woman who Bob called and Joe said visited Frank

f. the woman who Joe said visited Frank and (I said) Bob called
This all seems correct to me and quite general, for English. But not quite as so as might have seemed if the following is correct. The wrinkle involving embedding which saves (1e,f) is limited in a never noted way. Namely, it fails when the embedding verb, unlike say/believe, etc. takes an object NP as well as a complement. Thus I think (2) contrast with (1e,f):

(2)a. *the woman who Bob called and Joe told me visited Frank

b. *the woman who Joe told me visited Frank and Bob called

Other verbs like tell are of course promise/inform/convince/persuade/warn, I think they all behave like (2). What say you?? Am I fantasizing?
