Ground based auroral measurements can measure chemical composition of the thermosphere.

Coincident radar measurements and simple models provide information to construct new optical spectral ratios.