The house was designed by Micheal Graves in 1967. The house is in a suburban area in Fort Wayne, Indiana. It was designed for a family of two adults and two children. It is situated on the site diagonally along a stream that cuts through the lot that it was designed for.

A front view of the house. The North and South facades are largely made of windows, as well as the main entrance to the house, which is the center of the composition of the house.

The back facade is characterized mainly by the round structure built around the balcony leading to the stairs along the North side of the house.
A section of the house, positioned on a site similar to the one it was designed for and built upon. The image on the opposite page displays the house cut in half, portraying how the space is laid out. The plans above describe the floor plan in greater detail.
